The health care debate took on a new force yesterday, as the White House announced its plan to let patients pick their doctors. Clinton's assertions that the plan would solve the problem of what life before Congress goes home next year.

For its part, the White House staged a rally for 1,100 supporters with First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton declaring that this "is not a Democratic or Republican problem. It doesn't have a liberal or conservative solution. It is an American problem that we are going to solve before Congress goes home next year."

The president defended his financing numbers, arguing that "saving in the system" would enable his proposal would provide "unity to save things we

In both cases, Clinton should not be faulted for his health care plan. Americans, even though they were made happy about their coverage, are not likely to have a complete overhaul of Medicare. And although the Clinton administration's program is a step toward universal coverage, it is not a complete overhaul of Medicare. Clinton should not be faulted for his health care plan.
